

Environmental Health Perspectives

Biochar: Carbon Mitigation from the Ground Up

Environmental Health Perspectives, volume 117, number 2, February 2009

As multibillion-dollar projects intended to sequester carbon dioxide (CO₂) in deep geologic storage continue to seek financial support, the fertile black soils in the Amazon basin suggest a cheaper, lower-tech route toward the same destination.

Read more....